ABOUT THE REPORT

The Chemical Marketplaces Report

As the world's largest search engine for the chemical industry, chembid used its knowledge to provide the third issue of the chembid Marketplaces Report. This report is a comprehensive directory for digital marketplaces where chemicals are traded. It provides insights into the world of digital marketplaces.

Using standardized criteria, the report compares different digital purchasing platforms from around the world. It includes marketplaces specialized in chemicals and cross-industry marketplaces from all over the world. You can use it as a decision-making basis for planning your online purchases or sales.

Methodology

chembid's Marketplaces Report 2022 is based on a survey conducted by chembid, with data collection and processing from December 2021 to February 2022. For this purpose, the chembid search engine, other web search engines, the marketplaces themselves, and social media channels were used.

61 marketplaces made it into the report, as selection criteria were previously defined as follows:

- › Focus on platforms offering chemicals like marketplaces or e-auction platforms, excluding webshops or business directories.
- › The following type of platforms have not been considered: generalistic marketplaces with only a minimal number of chemical products, closed marketplaces showing no/little freely accessible information, platforms that are not available in German or English.

METHODOLOGY

Characteristics per Marketplace

Characteristic	Description
Type of marketplace/ platform	Is the marketplace generalistic (cross-industry) or specialized in chemical products?

Additional services	Which additional services does the marketplace offer?
Business model/paid services	How does the marketplace generate revenue?
Buying options	Can sellers purchase directly, on request, or via both options?
Contracting parties	Which parties are involved in the sales contract?
Price access	Does the marketplace allow access to product prices?
Access to supplier information	Does the marketplace allow access to supplier information?
Languages	In which languages is the marketplace available?
Miscellaneous	What other aspects have been noticed?

INTRODUCTION

About Marketplaces, Shops, Websites, Data Bases, and Search Engines

Data and information related to chemicals are widely scattered over the internet. A customer, be it a formulator or commercial buyer seeking detailed information associated with a specific molecule or an entire class of substances, will hardly find all relevant data and information in one single place. A complete set of data related to the substances, commercial product, operational data (e.g. availability), and regulatory information are often only available through the sales representative of the reseller.

For a digital discovery process, the customer is “trained” to use various information sources, from chemical marketplaces to branded websites or well-known online shops for chemicals. Often users need to step sideways to check chemical properties or mission-critical regulatory details on dedicated raw material databases of public data services.

Various sources need to be checked by the client to obtain a holistic overview in almost all discovery use cases. The process is error-prone, cumbersome, and time-consuming. chembid’s mission is to provide easy access to information resources and accurate chemical data.

As a vertical search engine, chembid’s focus is on chemicals. chembid strives to help users find (purchasers) or present (sellers) trusted chemical product data to the chemical community. The role of a vertical search engine like chembid in the growing digital ecosystem is that of a guide or compass to chemical product data. The digital journey starts with chembid.

ABOUT THE REPORT

Executive Summary

We all live in uncertain times. Significant global developments impact the chemical industry. The raw material crisis accompanied by the explosion of logistic costs resulting from the COVID19 pandemic is just one dimension of the challenges that the industry is facing. More challenges lay right ahead of us. Digitalization of processes and services, plus the need to share data and detailed information much faster and entirely trustworthy, will play an ever-growing role. Digital transformation is no longer an option, and it will be instrumental facing the new challenges to move businesses into a prosperous future.

We found that the traffic has increased significantly across all platforms during our months of research. This can be primarily attributed to the increasing acceptance of digitalization by players in the chemical industry as well as the pandemic situation. It is now becoming more apparent than ever that analogue and traditional business methods are steadily converting to digital. With restricted travel, no trade shows, no fairs and even lesser in-person meetings, a move to digital sales and marketing, plus a move to digital searching of new suppliers and sources is only natural.

The business models of many marketplaces have remained unchanged from our previous marketplace study in 2020. Most marketplaces offer different levels of membership plans, advertising services, and trading services. However, services have become more differentiated to provide customers with individual services and membership plans.

In addition, it became clear that some marketplaces are experiencing a real "boom", whereas other platforms have stagnated without any development. This was primarily determined by the web traffic, the number of offers, and the development of the platforms analyzed in terms of new features, search experience, and user interface design.

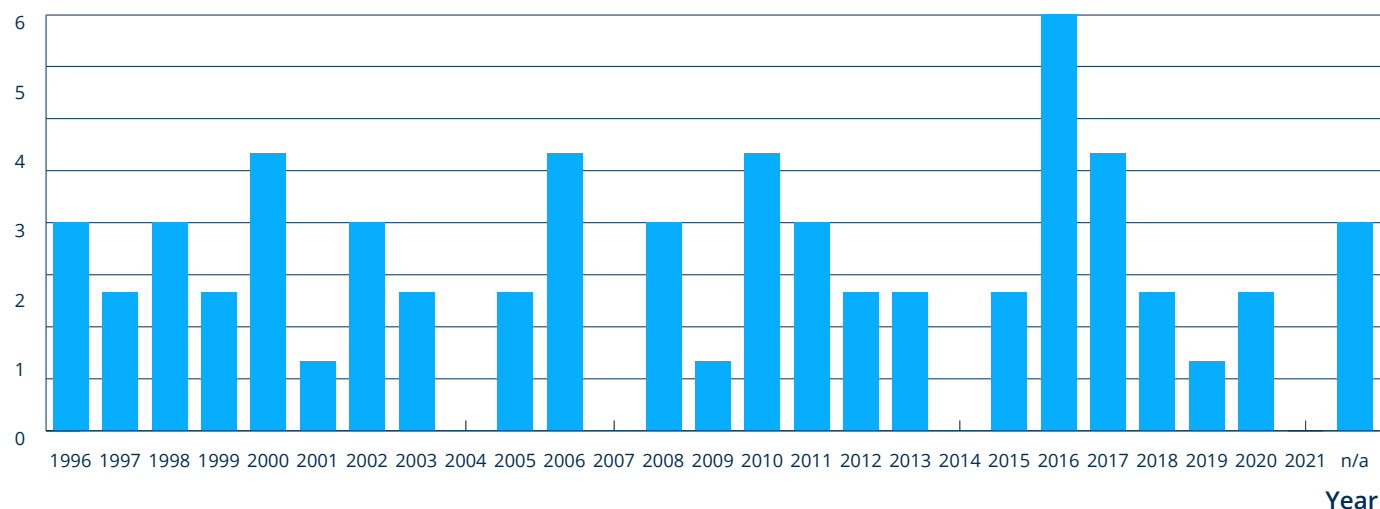

In addition, it could be determined that product data quality remained at a constant level across all platforms, from which challenges in data provision can be derived.
